

NIKE'S BIG BET:

ALBERTO SALAZAR AND THE FINE LINE OF SPORT

The greatest track team ever assembled was blown apart when its coach, the legendary Alberto Salazar, was handed a four-year doping ban from all coaching activities. Salazar's stable of world champions and national team elites were thrown for a loop just as their races transpired. Meanwhile, haters and defenders the world over went ballistic either maligning Salazar as a scourge on the sport, or in defending him as the greatest coach of all time, who had only the flimsiest of evidence lodged against him.

Indeed, not one of Salazar's athletes over the decades, and despite thousands of drug tests, has ever tested positive.

The bottom line was that the US Anti-Doping Association (USADA) had rendered its verdict and was not budging. Salazar was out.

Within a week The Nike Oregon Project (NOP) was disbanded.

Two weeks later the CEO of Nike, Mark Parker, was gone.

This film will uncover the truth of what really happened, from all sides of this story, including from Nike and Salazar, as well as the athletes and those steeped in the sport who believe a line was crossed.

Duration

1 x 84-minutes

(1 x 60-minute version also available)

Country of Production

Canada

Director & Producer

Paul Kemp

The Rise Of Jordan Peterson

Producer / Executive Producer

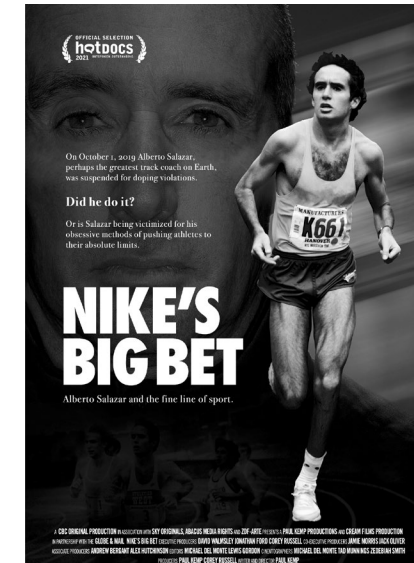

Corey Russell

Killing Patient Zero

Paul Kemp Productions & Cream
Films in partnership with the Globe and Mail

HOT DOCS

Official Selection

Web-site access:
NIKE'S BIG BET