

SERANGOON ROAD

1964-65. Exotic and tumultuous Singapore is a city at a crossroads. Political and racial tensions are at fever pitch as a new nation is about to be born. The Malayan Emergency is over, but British and Australian troops are still in the middle of an intense four year jungle war in neighbouring Borneo; and during this time, terrorists will set off more than 29 bombs in Singapore itself.

This is the city of Sam Callaghan, Patricia Cheng and the clients of the Cheng Detective Agency.

When her husband is mysteriously killed while working a case, Patricia Cheng (Joan Chen, Judge Dred) enlists the services of enigmatic Australian Sam Callaghan (Don Hany, Ali's Wedding) to help her run the Cheng Detective Agency. In order for the company to survive, Patricia knows she needs a good investigator with contacts in the Chinese and Malay communities as well as among US/British ex-pats. Sam is all of that. But after a childhood spent in a POW camp and a chequered career in military intelligence during the Malay Emergency, he comes with a lot of baggage.
